The OEPS case studies www.oeps.ac.uk are real life examples of open education as practiced by different individuals in education and in the third sector, they explore widening participation, learning in the workplace, OER in schools, OER as a tool for enabling cultural and policy change, student support and the process of building OER in partnership.

Creating OER

Some of the Open Educational Resources OEPS has helped create

Open Educational Practices and Open Educational Resources enable organisations to:

- Collaborate with educators to share organisation’s expertise
- Identify audience and purpose of an online course through learning design workshops
- Increase their awareness of assessment options in an open online course
- Create OER which provides additional online promotion of organisation and its aims
- Understand and engage in a course production process which often results in sustainable change in practice
